

Subject: TAX WITHHOLDING ON BONUSES

Get More “PR Bang” for your “Bonus Buck”

When paying bonuses, sales commissions or other “extra” payments to employees, you would like to place as much money in your employee’s net payroll check as possible, right? You call the IRS and they tell you to withhold a flat 25% for Federal income tax in addition to state, local, FICA and Medicare taxes, and nearly 40% of your incentive pay to employees has been eroded by taxes. The motivational impact of your bonus is diminished by substantial taxes withheld from it, and your employee is grateful to the IRS for the large tax refund received 6 months or a year later.

Is there a better way to handle Federal income tax withholding on bonuses and commissions (which the IRS calls “supplemental wage payments”)? Consider the optional “aggregate” method for withholding Federal income tax on bonuses. With this method you combine (“aggregate”) the employee bonus or commission with the employee’s ordinary wages, and then withhold Federal income tax based on the normal withholding tables. This method generally deposits more bonus net pay in your employee’s bank account.
